U. S. Security Plans Setup Is Criticized

United Press International

Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.) called on the Government yesterday to overhaul its national security planning to help the United States "outthink, outplan and outperform" Russia in the cold war.

Jackson is chairman of a Senate subcommittee studying national policy machinery. He made the statement in making public a subcommittee staff report which he said raised the question whether a "super-secretary" should be named to handle national security affairs.

Jackson said Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev's recent U. S. visit "underscored Moscow's master plan to beat us in a long-term, relentless across-the-board competition — economic, political, cultural and military."
